In order to work here the foreigner needs a work permit, which must be applied for by his prospective employer. The problem here is that the Department of Employment has the right to 1 or refuse these permits, and there is little that can be 2 about it. It would be extremely unwise 3 a foreign visitor to work without a permit, since anyone doing so is 4 to immediate deportation. There are some 5 to this rule, most notably people from the Common Market countries, who are 6 to work without permits and who are often given temporary residence permits of up to five years. Some 7 people, such as doctors, foreign journalists, authors and others, can work without permits. The problem with the Act is not just that some of its rules are unfair but 8 it is administered, and the people who administer it. An immigration official has the power to stop a visitor 9 these shores coming into the country. If this happens the visitor has the 10 to appeal to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal. While the appeals are being considered, the visitor has no choice but to wait sometimes for quite a long time.
