It Pays to Be Honest
Honesty is the chief and most honored virtue in this country. Being dishonest is , for Chinese , a shameful thing. But , to my dismay , more and more people are seen engaged in open and rampant dishonest activities nowadays. It seems that people no longer cherish honesty. Students devise various strategies to cheat in examinations , write false resumes in job-hunting , etc Businessmen wouldnt stop selling fake and inferior commodities unless they are caught. Athletes desire to get an advantage over competitors by adopting stimulants. In a word , dishonest phenomena exist in every corner of the society. However , I still value honesty because being honest benefits all of us. For instance , if businessmen are honest in product promotion or sale , their customers will get genuine satisfaction and will return to buy more , which is a win-win situation. We are partners in this interdependent world. If we could compete and cooperate in an honest manner , that is to say , on an equal footing , all of us would reap huge benefits and achieve greater success sooner or later. In conclusion , it pays to be honest. I sincerely hope that people from all walks of life would be honest in their daily lives. (十五)

It was 5 : 30 p.m. , I was riding my favorite Giant back home. When I got to the last crossing on the Golden Lion Street , the red light was on. So I applied the brakes , along with a long queue of vehicles waiting to pass. Just at that moment , a heavy-load truck with earth roared forward at my side and bumped against a private Accord of Honda travelling eastbound. As a result , the windshield of the lorry was broken into pieces and its driver got fatally wounded on the head on the steering wheel. The driver of the Accord and his girlfriend , the only passenger in the car , only got minor injuries , but his car lost its rear axel and two wheels and was totally dead. As for the cause of the accident , I think the driver of the lorry should be held responsible : the light was red then ; he should have stopped and waited. It was he who had broken the traffic regulations. In addition , the bad weather was part of the cause. It was drizzling then , and the road was quite slippery. Finally , drunk driving was probably an important factor. As the police discovered on the spot , there was a heavy alcoholic smell on the dead body of the lorry driver. 100Test 下载频道开通 , 各类考试题目直接下载。详细请访问 www.100test.com
