: www.examda.com If we look at education in our own society , we see two sharply different factors. First of all , there is the overwhelming majority of teachers , principals , curriculum planners , school superintendents , who are devoted to passing on the knowledge that children need in order to live in our industrialized society. Their chief concern is with efficiency , that is , with implanting the greatest number of facts into the greatest possible number of children , with a minimum of time , expense , and effort. Classroom learning often has as its unspoken goal the reward of pleasing the teacher. Children in the usual classroom learn very quickly that creativity is punished , while repeating a memorized response is rewarded , and concentrate on what the teacher wants them to say , rather than understanding the problem. The difference between the intrinsic and the extrinsic aspects of a college education is illustrated by the following story about Upton Sinclair. When Sinclair was a young man , he found that he was unable to raise the tuition money needed to attend college. Upon careful reading of the college catalogue , however , he found that if a student failed a course , he received no credit for the course , but was obliged to take another course in its place. The college did not charge the student for the second course , reasoning that he had already paid once for his credit. Sinclair took advantage of this policy and not a free education by deliberately failing all his courses. In the ideal college , there would be no credits , no degrees , and no required courses. A person would learn what he wanted to learn. A friend and I attempted to put this ideal into action by starting a series of seminars at Brandeis called “ Freshman Seminars Introduction to the Intellectual Life. ” In the ideal college , intrinsic education would be available to anyone who wanted it since anyone can improve and learn. The student body might include creative , intelligent children as well as adults ; morons as well as geniuses (for even morons can learn emotionally and spiritually) 。 The college would be ubiquitous that is , not restricted to particular buildings at particular times , and teachers would be any human beings who had something that they wanted to share with others. The college would be lifelong , for learning can take place all through life. Even dying can be a philosophically illuminating , highly educative experience. The ideal college would be a kind of education retreat in which you could try to find yourself ; find out what you like and want ; what you are and are not good at. The chief goals of the ideal college , in other words , would be the discovery of identity , and with it , the discovery of vocation. 1. In the author
