Which of the following does the first paragraph imply? 1. Once while being prepped for a television interview, I was chatting with the host about stay-at-home fathers. I made the point that one reason we're seeing more stay-at-home dads may be that it's no longer a given that a man makes more money than his wife. Many families now take earning power into account when deciding which parent will stay home. prep = prepare interview 采访 chat with 聊天 host 主持人 earn 挣钱 take sth. into account 充分考虑 no longer = no more 不再 a given 已知事实 a ) Men are no longer given the opportunity to stay at home. b ) In more and more families the wife is earning more than the husband. c ) The author works at a TV station. d ) More and more men choose to stay at home to look after their children. opportunity 机会 答案 : b 2. At that point, one of the male crew members commented, almost to himself but loud enough for my benefit, " It should be the better parent who stays home. " A lot of guys say things like that. Usually it's code for, " My wife ( read: any woman ) is the better parent. " 问题2. The author decided to stay at home to look after their son eight years ago because eight years ago 3. I was a stay-at-home father for eight years, so his declaration made me bristle. It implied that our family's choice could only have been correct if I was a " better " parent than my wife. 4. I think men shoot themselves in the foot with this kind of thinking. I suppose an argument could have been made that when I began staying home my wife was the " better " parent: She had spent more time with Ry, could read him better and calm him more quickly. And given a choice, he'd have picked her over me. But as she was the more employable one, my wife went out to work and I looked after our son. declare 宣称 declaration 宣言 “ but ” 引出新观点 as 因为 , since, for, now that. employ v. 雇佣 employable 称职的

5. Know what? I caught up. Because of the increased time I spent with him, I soon knew Ry well, understood what he needed and could look after him more or less as well as my wife could. Actually, the experience helped me unlock one of the world's great secrets: Women are good at looking after children because they do it. It's not because of any innate female aptitude or a mother's instinct - which I think is mostly learned anyway. It's because they put in the time and attention required to become good at the job. innate 天生的 female 女性的 aptitude 才华 instinct 本质, 本能 a) they were born with the ability. b) they just enjoy doing it. c) they spend more time with them. d) they have learned to do it at school. 答案: c

问题5. Which of the following is the conclusion the author draws at the end of the article?

6. Women obviously get a biological head start from giving birth and nursing, but over the long term experience is more important. When I got the experience myself, I was wood, too. As good?
