Questions 36 to 40 are based on the following passage. You ' re late for a job interview when traffic slows to a crawl. At the supermarket, a customer wheeling a full cart cuts ahead of you in the check-out line. You spend months on a make-it or break-it project, and your lazy colleague lands the promotion. Feel that burn? Before you explode with rage or fly into a fury, take a deep breath and remember this: Anger hurts. Study after study has found that high levels of anger and hostility are associated with greater risk for heart disease, poor immune responses, and even a tendency for obesity(肥胖). Men with high anger scores were three times more likely to develop heart disease than their calmer companions, a Harvard School of Public Health study found. And in women, arguments with spouses raise hormone levels and lower immunity—a real problem, since lower immune response may increase women ' s risk of cancer. It doesn ' t seem to matter whether you release the anger or hold it in, experts say. The effects on your health are the same. “ Anger is anger, ” says Redford Williams, M.D), director of the Behavioral Medicine Research Center at Duke University Medical Center and co-author of the book Life Skills. “ Both are harmful to health. ” The good news is, it is possible to control your anger. “ By evaluating it and using various techniques, you can talk yourself out of it, ” Williams says, “ That ' s what ' s nice about us humans: We can always do something or not do something to change our behavior. ” 36.
