expenditures in the 1987 federal budget and a comparison between the budget outlay of 1986 and that of 1987. according to the chart, the federal revenues would be from six sources: 39% from individual income taxes, 30% from social insurance receipts, 14% from borrowing, 9% from corporation income taxes. 4% from excise taxes, and 4% from others. This money would be spend in five areas: 41% for direct benefit payments for individuals, 28% for national defence(which include Pentagon spending, energy department, and nuclear weapons), 15% for net interest, 10% for grants to the states and localities, and 6% for other federal operations.来源

: www.examda.com The budget indicates that the highest percentage of federal revenues would be from the individuals and would be spent directly for the benefits of the individuals. The second point is that the federal government was relying heavily on borrowing and had to bear the heavy burden of interest, which would make up 15% of expenditures in 1987, higher than the percentage of the borrowing in the revenues. The third point is that the percentage for national defense was too high. As we all know, a budget by a government shows the policies the government will adopt. The comparison between the budget outlay in 1986 and that of 1987 indicates that the federal government would reduce its spending on education, transportation, and agriculture and increase its expenditures for social security and national defence. Besides, the increase on national defense was more than the increase on social security. Obviously, the federal government was adopting a policy that many people would not welcome. 100Test 下载频道开通，各类考试题目直接下载。详细请访问 www.100test.com
