One evening there was great excitement in our village. A __1__ company of actors had arrived, and it was __2__ that they would give their first performance on that night. The play would be given in a stable, one that was __3__ enough to accommodate about a hundred people. At one end of it a stage had already been erected. Lighting was __4__ by four lamps, and a curtain was being hastily fixed up, __5__ two small boys to draw it backwards and forwards. Before seven o'clock every seat was occupied. __6__ who were not __7__ enough to get a place on a bench stood at the back, when still others crowded outside the open door, __8__ at least to hear the story. There were only three actors, a man, a woman and a boy. At a quarter past seven, the stage manager, who was also the __9__ actor, after poking his head several times round the corner of the curtain, decided that the impatient audience __10__ not be kept waiting any longer, so the play began.
