The announcement came as investigations into workers pay expands across the country. Su Jingshi, president of the greater China operations of Yum! Brands Inc., which operates KFC and Pizza Hut, made the announcement at a press conference in Beijing. "Our position is that the general public should wait for the government's decision with a calm and objective attitude. After the investigation is finished and a decision is made, KFC will fully follow instructions and do what the government requires the company to do in compliance with labor laws." Labor bureaus in the southern province of Guangdong began investigations after media reports claimed McDonalds, KFC and Pizza Hut paid part-time workers less than the local minimum wage of about 1 US dollar an hour. Both McDonalds and KFC said they were seeking clarification of the labor laws, while the All China Federation of Trade Unions announced the probe into underpayment had expanded to other cities and provinces.相关链接：近日，有媒体曝光洋快餐在聘用兼职人员中出现的问题，在社会上引起了热烈的反响。洋快餐所聘用的兼职大学生是否属于“非全日制用工”？是否应适用劳动法及有关最低工资的限制？昨天，广东省和广州市律师协
