It is said that in New England one is always climbing hills. A large part of New England is also made up of farms and farming lands. Yet New England is not really a farming area. The farms are small. Generally they are only large enough to support one family. It also happens that the soil of New England is not good. This soil has been worked and planted for so many years that it has lost its value. Most New Englanders today work in factories or small businesses. In these factories they make watches and clocks, shoes, clothing, special tools for industry, leather goods, etc. New England workmen are famous for their skill in making many of these things. This skill is often passed down in families from father to son. Questions 17 to 20 are based on the passage you have just heard. 17. What is the main feature of New England? 18. Why is New England not good for farming? 19. How do most people in New England make a living? 20. Where do New Englanders learn many of their skills? 100Test 下载频道开通，各类考试题目直接下载。详细请访问 www.100test.com
