He couldnt find it in its usual place on a table in the sitting room. "What have you done with it?" he asked his wife. She said she hadnt seen it, and told him it was probably under his nose, if hed only open his eyes and look. He went into their sons bedroom to read him his bedtime story (故事，新闻报道). On the floor there lay a bottle, the one hed been looking for. but it was empty. "David, what have you done with those sweet tablets (药片) which were in that bottle? Did you eat them?" David nodded. "How many did you eat?" No reply. He called his wife. She came, realized what had happened and went very white. "There must have been twenty five or thirty tablets left in the bottle. He cant have taken them all." But there were no tablets on the floor, or in Davids bed. David and his mother and father hurried to the nearest hospital. "Put the boy on the stomach pump (胃唧筒) at once," said the doctor, as soon as he heard the facts. They could hear David crying as they sat in the waiting room. that was the worst of it, for they were wondering if the child was going to be all right, but unable (不能的，无能为力的) to do anything except wait. Then the crying stopped and the doctor came back. "Lucky you brought him quickly. The tablets dont have time to dissolve (溶化) in his stomach, so we got them all out. Hes going to be all right." They took David home, and bought a medicine box with a lock on it the next day. 64. The medicine bottle was .
