It had been hot there, so Mr. Cooper has shaved off his beard. But his passport photograph shows him with his beard. An officer looks at the photograph for a moment, and says: "Will you excuse me? Please sit down. I shall not keep you long." With this, he walks away, shows the photograph to the second officer and says: "I know that face." The second officer looks at the passport and asks where Mr. Cooper has come from. When he hears that the Coopers have just arrived back from Rome (罗马), the second officers eyes light up and he says: "An Englishman with a beard stole a painting in Rome on Friday. And that man looks just the sort of man." Suddenly, the first officer recognizes who Mr. Cooper is. He returns to him, and asks: "Did you teach at Feltham High School?" When Mr. Cooper answers, with some surprise, that he did, the officer smiles, and says: "I thought so. Im Alan Simpson. You taught me French. You havent changed a bit." 11. Who was Mr. Cooper? He was Alan Simpsons French teacher. He was an officer. The speaker doesnt tell us. 12. Where do you think Mr. Cooper lives and works? In England. In Rome. In France. 13. Why does the second officers eyes light up? Because he remembers that a painting had been stolen in Rome and Mr. Cooper looks just the sort of man. Because he is one of the students of Mr. Cooper. Because he recognizes who he is. John telephoned his wife, "I've managed to get two free tickets for the theatre. Please come and meet me outside my office. We'll have something to eat first and then go to the theatre." John's wife was very glad because it was quite a long time since they had been to the theatre, which she liked very much. She met her husband as he told her. They had dinner first and got to the theatre in good time. At the entrance of the theatre, John took out his wallet (钱包) to get the tickets, "Mmm? That's very strange," he said. "They aren't here!" "Try your pockets," suggested his wife. But the tickets were not there either. John looked very worried. "What's the matter?" asked his wife. "Well," John explained, "I remember what I did with the tickets. I put them on my desk and forgot to pick them up before leaving the office!"

14. What did John tell his wife over the telephone? He had got two tickets for the theatre. He had bought a new bike. He would be home late.

15. How did his wife feel when she heard what he told her? She felt very sad. She felt very happy. She was surprised.

16. What were they going to do before they went to the theatre? They would go to the post office. They would go shopping first. They would have a meal first.

17. Why did John look worried? He couldn't find the tickets. His wife fell ill. He hurt his legs and couldn't walk.

Last summer I went to Miami Beach, Florida, where I stayed for two weeks. My friend John and I flew to Miami from New York in three hours. It was the first time for both of us to travel by air. We settled back in deep armchairs and enjoyed an unusual and breathtaking (使人吃惊的, 非凡的) view (视野, 景色) of the world. We went there because the rates were lower (较低的, 降低) out of season.

We stayed at a hotel on the beach. We slept late every morning and then had breakfast outdoors near the pool. When the weather was not too hot, we used to go sightseeing (观光 , 游览) in the morning. We visited the campus (校园) of the University of Miami, and the Everglades. In the afternoon, we used to go swimming in the ocean or the pool, lie in the sun, or go water-skiing. After dinner in the evening, we used to go dancing in a discotheque or enjoy ourselves in the night clubs. The weather was very good every day, and the two weeks went by only too quickly. We were both very sorry when we had to leave.

18. Where did the speaker and his friend stay for two weeks last summer? In the University of Miami. In Florida. In New York.

19. How long did it take them to fly to Miami? About two hours. About three hours. About half a day.

20. What's the weather like during their stay there? Very nice every day. Very good with occasional (偶然的) rain. Very good sometimes.
