There are a few friends who think purchasing a car is a better choice while the others prefer going on a vacation. In my personal point of view, I would probably choose the former. In the following discussion I would like to reason and provide evidence to support my viewpoint.No issue is more important than this one that purchasing a car can bring much convenience. Undeniable facts witness and present many examples as below: First, if you own a car, you can go to work every day by driving without wasting time on the way to bus or metro station. Second, you can take a short trip any time during the weekend if you want to do it. The third, not the last, you can do some shopping in some places where you can ' t reach by public transportation before. Don ' t you think that the examples mentioned above are so persuasive?That a car is a worthy thing is another chief and key reason that I choose to put here. It is no better illustration that can prove the standpoint that purchasing a car is a better choice than going on a vacation. A worthy thing means that it can be changed for money again. If one day you do not need a car, you can choose to sell it to others and then you can get money back. So, you can take a vacation with the money in the future. I believe, if you see that, you can understand it more deeply. Of course, to some extent, going on a vacation also has its own distinct merits such as visiting a famous place that you have not been to, relaxing yourself, and learning something different from your hometown and so on. But if all factors are contemplated, nevertheless, the advantages of purchasing a car carry more weight than those of going on a vacation. So the most outstanding conclusion is very apparent. All in all, from what has been discussed above, which sometimes intertwines to form an organic whole and thus becomes more convincing, we can safely draw the conclusion that purchasing a car is a better choice than going on a vacation with unexpected money. As a matter of fact, not only do I prefer purchasing a car, but also prefer purchasing such a worthy thing as a car or an apartment as possible as you can if you obtain big money abruptly. 100Test 下载 频道开通 , 各类考试题目直接下载。详细请访问 www.100test.com
