But the executives were less forthcoming on plans for hiring or spending their profits, two factors of significance for sustaining economic growth. Almost 85 percent of CEOs surveyed by the Business Council and the Conference Board said they expected their companies to post higher profits over the next year, driven by increased revenue rather than cost-cutting, with 22 percent expecting the increase to be substantial. Around 85 percent said business conditions in the economy today were the same or better than they were six months ago, and 40 percent expected them to improve further in the next six months, the survey of Blue Chip bosses found. The survey, which quizzed 76 of the councils 125 CEO members and which is often regarded as a barometer of corporate sentiment, found that geopolitical events, such as war or terrorism, topped the list of CEOs concerns. Around 86 percent of respondents also said escalating healthcare costs in the United States were either the "most" important or a "very" important policy concern. 中文：全球一些大企业CEO预期继续盈利 路透社2月25日报道，美国商务理事会和世界大企业联合会(the Business Council and the Conference
