Among the early Greeks , Aristotle was the first to watch living things and to try to classify them , to attempt to find out how life begins , and to write down his observation . His methods “ work with the catfish as typical of his procedures . He spent hours at the stern of a small boat on the coast of Lesbos in the Aegean Sea leaning far out in the clear , shallow water , looking down at a catfish that had its eggs among the reeds . When he watched , he held his boat steady with a strong pole so it would not float away . Later he made a record of what he had seen . So day after day from the stern of his small boat near the shore . Aristotle watched the life of the underwater world as it was . Everyone had fish before . and the fishermen knew something about their habits , but this knowledge helped them to get a bigger catch . But until then Aristotle had watched the ways of fish with the single purpose of trying to understand them . Aristotle thought that he observed each living thing carefully enough and recorded what he saw , he would come closer to life . He had great patience and extraordinary
