A growing number of educators in the United States have begun to question just how beneficial computers are in the classroom. The debate raging in the US is being closely watched by European and Asian educators who welcome technology but also want to learn from American mistakes. Statistic shows 26% of American school children aged 5 to 9 years old use computers at school. Yet, little research has been conducted to examine at what impact computers have on childrens cognitive and emotional development. Our concern is that this is very powerful technology the effects of which we really don't know. This morning, I am going to talk briefly about consumer price changes in five major countries. Let's look at the US figures. As you can see, the annual change in consumer prices rose from around 4% in 2002 to just under 6% in 2004. At present, the United States has the highest rate of inflation of the 5 countries considered. Now, turning to France. We can see that consumer prices rose less quickly than those in Britain and the US. Inflation rose over to over 3% in 2005. By 2006, the inflation rate in France had fallen below that in Germany and was now equal to that in Japan. 100Test 下载频道开通，各类考试题目直接下载。详细请访问 www.100test.com
