According to government statistics, men of all social classes in Britain visit pubs quite often, 1 the kind of pub they go to may be different and their reasons for going there 2, too. At present, they often take their wives or girlfriends, which 3 to be the case. The fact is that the Typical English pub is changing, not only 4 the licensing laws not being so strict as they 5, but also because publicans are trying to 6 away with the old Victorian 7 of the pub and 8 provide couples with an atmosphere where they can both feel happy. Pubs used not to open 9 at certain time. The result was that they were usually 10 with men who seemed to be drinking as much as possible in the time 11. But the kind of pub is quickly becoming a thing of the past. Curiously enough, the old British licensing laws, which foreigners found so objectionable and absurd, were 12 introduced as a 13 measure to stop workers drinking in the World War I. 14, the strong puritanical 15 in Parliament took 16 of the law and 17 it. Opening hours are 18 limited to eight hours a day, but publicans can now choose which hours 19 them best. And nowadays you can even get a cup of coffee if you prefer 20 beer. But in spite of this the Puritans would never dream of admitting that a pub could become a repeatable place. 1) A and B though C when D as 2) A disagree B diverge C vary D deviate 3) A used not B not used C used D is used
