The reason is that we ' re all afraid of making fools of ourselves. The more important the speech is, the more frightened we become. But stop biting your finger-nails. Public speaking is easy. It ' s just plain talking, and you talk all the time. Although I ' m basically shy, I ' ve been making speeches and talking on radio and television for more than 30 years, and I can tell you that public speaking is not a “ gift ” like musical talent or being able to draw. Anybody who can talk can speak in public. Here are some of the lessons I have learned: Keep it simple. Your audience is going to come away with one or two of your main ideas. One or two. Not ten or 20. If you can ' t express in a sentence or two what you intend to get across, then your speech will not be focused well enough. And if you don ' t have a clear idea of what you want to say, there ' s no way your audience will. Get it organized. No matter how long or short your speech is, you ' ve got to get your ducks in a row (把事情安排得井井有条) — how you ' re going to open, what major points you want to make and how you ' re going to close. When I do a radio or TV piece, I often write the last sentence first. When you know where you ' re headed, you can choose any route to get there. A strong close is critical: the last thing you say is what your audience will most likely remember. Keep it short. The standard length of a vaudeville (综艺节目) act is 12 minutes. If all those troupers (有经验的演员) singing and dancing their hearts out couldn't go on longer without boring the audience, what makes you think you can? Help: make a fool of yourself to do something stupid which makes other people think that you are fool 出丑 come away with to leave a place with a particular feeling or impression (带着某种感觉或印象) 离开百考试题编辑整理 100Test 下载频道开通, 各类考试题目直接下载。详细请访问 www.100test.com
