The cruise ship ran aground but there were no risks to the people aboard, the Argentine navy and the ships operator reported. The Ocean Nova, a Bahamas flagged cruiser with 104 people aboard which conducted a tour of Antarctica, is seen stranded near an Argentine base in Antarctica February 17, 2009. (Xinhua/Reuters Photo) BUENOS AIRES, Argentina The 65 passengers and 41 crew members aboard a cruise ship that ran aground off Antarctica have been safely transferred to another ship, the operator and Argentine navy announced Wednesday. Ship operator Quark Expeditions said in a news release that the 106 people aboard the Bahamian-flagged Ocean Nova are now sailing on the Clipper Adventure. The Clipper Adventure will return to Ushuaia, Argentinas southernmost city and the original jumping-off point for the 15-day voyage exploring the polar circle. www.100test.com The Ocean Nova ran aground earlier Tuesday morning amid high winds, but was unable to break free during the rising evening tide as officials had hoped. The passengers were more than a week into their 15-day voyage exploring the polar circle. Quark Expeditions said "continuing high winds thwarted the attempt to dislodge" the ship Wednesday afternoon. But several hours after the passengers were rescued, the late evening tide lifted the Ocean Nova away from the rocky shore. An inspection by divers showed no damage or leaking, so the ship will host a separate 20-day expedition of the Antarctic Peninsula, South Georgia and the Falkland Islands beginning Feb. 22, the operator said. 100Test 下载 频道开通，各类考试题目直接下载。详细请访问 www.100test.com
