The French surprised even themselves when they banned tobacco ads three years ago, and created smoke-free zones in public spaces. Even then, ___(1)___ seemed a little too American. Now some French lawmakers are preparing to end the act as reform that simply can't work in a country ___(2)___ . Law or no law, smokers and nonsmokers mingle ___(3)___ , whose owners generally ignore requirements to create separate no-smoking sections. French smokers ___(4)___ , in hospitals and directly under no -smoking signs. There are stiff fines for violating the smoke-free areas, but they are never imposed. "We have more important things to do", says a Paris official. The 1992 law 's most controversial provision is the tobacco-ad ban. An exception has been made for motor sports, which are underwritten by tobacco firms. And fans shouted angrily when French TV blacked out a soccer game from abroad because of "secondary" tobacco and liquor ads at the local stadium. Still, those ___(5)___ credit the ad ban for a 15 percent 0drop in smoking among French teens in the last three years.
