Correction (15 minutes) Traditionally, the American farmer has always been independent and hard-working. In the eighteenth century farmers were quite self-sufficient. The farm family grew and made almost everything it needed. The surplus crop would be sold to buy a new --71. items in the local general store. In 1860, because some of the farm population had moved to --72. the city, yet eighty percent of the American population was still in the country. In the late nineteenth century, farm work and life --73. were not much changed from that they had been in old days. The --74. farmer awoke at dawn or before and had much work to do, with --75. his own muscles like his chief source of power. He used axes, --76. spades and other complicated tools. In his house cooking was done --77. in wood-burning stoves, and the kerosene lamp was the only improvement on the candle. The family's recreation and social life chiefly consisted a drive in the wagon to the nearby small town or --78. village to transact some business as well as to chat with neighbors who had also come to town. The children attended a small elementary school (often of just one room) to that they had to walk every day, possibly for a --79. few miles. The school term was short so that the children could not help on the farm. Although the whole family worked, and life --80. was not easy, farmers as a class were self-reliant and independent. 答案：71. nothing --- everything 72.
