The Shannon Dolphin and Wildlife Foundation (SDWF)<sup>1</sup> has been studying a group of up to 120 bottle-nose dolphins in the River Shannon<sup>2</sup> using vocalisations collected on a computer in a cow shed<sup>3</sup> near the River Shannon. As part of a research project, student Ronan Hickey digitised and analysed a total of 1,882 whistles from the Irish dolphins and those<sup>4</sup> from the Welsh dolphins on a computer and separated them into six fundamental whistle types and 32 different categories<sup>5</sup>. Of the categories, he found most<sup>6</sup> were used by both sets of dolphins<sup>7</sup> -- but eight were only heard from the Irish dolphins. "We are building up a catalogue of the different whistle types they use and trying to associate them with behaviour like foraging, resting, socialising and the communications of groups with calves," project leader Simon Berrow said. "Essentially we are building up what is like a dictionary of words they use or sounds they make." Berrow, a marine biologist, said the dolphins clicks are used to find their way around and locate prey. The whistles are communications. "They do a whole range of other sounds like barks, groans and a kind of gunshot," he said. "The gunshot is an intense pulse of sound. Sperm whales use it to stun their prey. "When I first heard it I was surprised as I thought sperm whales were the only species who used it. We can speculate the dolphins are using it for the same reason as the sperm whales," Berrow said. References<sup>8</sup> in local legend indicate there have been dolphins in the Shannon estuary for generations and they may even have been resident there as far back as the 6th century<sup>9</sup>. They are regularly seen by passengers on the Shannon ferry and an estimated 25,000 tourists every year take special sightseeing tours on local boats to visit them.
