阅读新题型 Many musicians begin studying an instrument at an early age. They may gain valuable experience by playing it in a school party or with friends. Musicians and singers continually make great efforts to improve themselves exploring different styles of music. Formal training may be received through studying music programs with a skilled teacher in a college or university. Musicians must be knowledgeable about many musical styles but finally find the one that interests them most. Having many interests and skills can help enlarge employment opportunities and musical ability. Young students considering careers in music should have musical talent¹, creativity, and a good stage presence. Quality performance requires long-time study and practice, so self-discipline² is quite important. To keep up a career as a musician, performers must achieve a high level of performance. Moreover, musicians who play in concerts or in nightclubs and those who tour must have physical energy to travel and play long performances. Because musicians must always make their performances look effortless, preparation and practice are important. Musicians must also be prepared to face the anxiety of discontinuous employment. Advancement for musicians usually means becoming better known, finding work more easily, and performing for more money. Successful musicians often depend on agents to find them opportunities to perform, and develop their careers. Notes: 1. talent n. 天才, 才干 2. self-discipline n. 自律, 自我约束 Musicians' Training, Qualifications, and
