He weighs 400 pounds. he is fearless and he never goes to sleep on the job. An ideal security guard? For many situations he may be. And if hes so good that you wish you had a dozen like him, just place your order. Denny is a robot guard. Denny can detect, within a 150-foot radius, the presence of anything or anybody that shouldnt be there. Its swiveling (旋转) head contains microwave and infrared sensors that can detect people as well as smoke. In future editions the head will also contain sensors that can smell the weak smell of a human body.2010年全国职称英语考试六大题型复习攻略 A high-resolution TV camera in Dennys head is on at all time. When something unexpected comes into view, the TV transmitter switches on. Thus the human overseer (看管人) in the control center sees the sudden appearance of a picture on the monitor screen. At the same time the picture is automatically videotaped. Normal speed of the robot guards is about one mile an hour, and they can even talk: you have been detected, warns the voice from the clever guard. Denny is designed to patrol corridors and other areas after lock-down hours (of course, he can work round the clock when necessary), not to move among people. If, say, a prisoner does get near the corridor where he should not be, itll immediately tell its base station by radio. Denny has understandable limitations. He cant open doors or watch stairs, for example, or distinguish friend from enemy. Thus he will have to go about unarmed. And he wont be able to replace human security guards where people move about freely. 31 Denny is a robot guard, who A has mechanical anus and legs. B has microwave and infrared sensors. C has a built-in computer.
