

网校名师么教授09年职称英语押中题目之卫生类A级阅读理解 职称英语考试 PDF转换可能丢失图片或格式，建议阅读原文 https://www.100test.com/kao_ti2020/645/2021_2022__E7_BD_91_E6_A0_A1_E5_90_8D_E5_c91_645370.htm 卫生类A级试卷押中 题目阅读理解： 第二篇 Surprised by a Miracle I had been working in the trauma unit at a local hospital for about a year. You get used to families thinking that a "coma" patient is moving their hand or doing something that they were asked to do. "Following commands" is what we call it. Often it ' s "wishful thinking" on the families ' part. Nurses can easily become callous to it. On this particular night during visiting hours, my patient ' s wife came in. I had taken care of him for several nights. I was very familiar with his care and what he was able to do. Actually, he didn ' t do anything.
He barely moved at all, even when something would obviously hurt him, such as suctioning. His wife was very short, about 5 feet tall. She had to stand on a stool to lean over him, so that she could see his face and talk to him. She climbed up on the stool. I spoke to her for a few minutes, and then stepped out to tend to my other patient. A few minutes later, she came running out of the room. In an excited voice, she said, "Donna, he ' s moving his hand!" I immediately thought that it was probably her imagination, and that he had not actually done it on purpose. He had been there about a month at the time and had never made any movements on purpose. I asked her what had happened and she said, "I asked him to squeeze my hand and he did !" This led me to another train of questioning. "But, did he let go when you asked him to?" She said yes, that he had done exactly what she asked. I went into the room with her, not really believing that I would see anything different than I had always seen. But I decided that it would be better to pacify her than to make her think I didn't believe her or that she was somehow mistaken.来源：考试大 She asked him to squeeze her hand, which he did. I said, "Well, ask him to let go." He continued to squeeze for a moment, so that when he finally did let go, I really still didn't believe that he had done it on purpose. So, I said, "Ask him to hold up one finger." He did as asked. Well, hmm, this was starting to get my attention. I looked at him, his face still somewhat swollen and his eyes still closed. "Stick out your tongue!" I said. He did it. I almost fell on the floor. It was the first time I had ever seen anyone "wake up." 36. The first paragraph indicates that more often than not a coma patient A is found to be following commands. B is thought to be following commands. C is used to following commands. D is callous to nurses' commands. 37. What was the condition of the patient before that particular night? A He talked only with his wife. B He barely moved at all. C He moved only when hurt. D He was too lazy to do anything at all. 38. How did the author feel upon first hearing what the excited wife said? A She was amused. B She was doubtful. C She was scared. D She was shocked. 39. What did the patient do on that particular night? A He squeezed and let go his wife's hand. B He held up one of his fingers. C He stuck out his tongue. D All of the above. 40. The author "almost fell on the floor" because A she could hardly believe her eyes. B she had been working too hard. C she had been deceived. D she had been tripped. 编辑推荐：为帮助广大学员有效备考

，我们特推出了职称英语2010年网络辅导课程,相信会让大家有耳目一新的视听感受。2009年职称英语通过率近100%，为答谢数十万用户厚爱，百考试题环球网校 100Test 下载频道开通，各类考试题目直接下载。详细请访问 www.100test.com