In America, as every school student knows, the important raw materials of industry are coal, oil and iron. But, as every businessman knows, the most important raw material of all is the school student who, as a trained college graduate, will be the U.S. industry of the future. Today U.S. industry is faced with a tight shrinkage of such manpower, it needs not only more but better trained college graduates. To help get them 1, many a businessman believes, that 2 must provide much of the cash needed by the colleges to 3 their facilities and improve their teaching, and work more closely with 4 on business's needs. As Robert R. Young pointed out at a conference of businessmen and educators, industry and education have a clear mutuality of interest. Businessmen and educators have not always 5 this. While there are a few businessmen who 6 regard college professors as vague-minded and likely to be radicals, and a few educator who still look on businessmen as merely money grabbers, the mutual 7 has generally disappeared into the mutual need. The 8 expanding U.S. economy has made college graduates more important than 9 to industry. In turn, universities must depend increasingly on corporations for contributions, since high taxes have all but cut 10 the flow of the big individual contributions that build the private school.
