Rich and poor , young and old , one can see them all there , shouting and cheering for one side or the other. One of the most surprising things about football in England to a stranger is the great knowledge of the game which even the smallest boy seems to have. He can tell you the names of the players in most of the important teams. He has photographs of them and knows the results of a large number of matches. He will tell you , with a great air of authority , who he expects will win such and such a match , and his opinion is usually as valuable as that of men three or four times his age. Most schools in England take football seriously - much more seriously than nearly all European schools , where lessons are all-important (至关重要的) , and games left for private arrangements. In England , it is believed that education is not only a matter of filling a boys mind with facts in a classroom ; education also means character training ; and one of the best ways of training character is by means of games , especially team games , where the boy has to learn to work with others for his team , instead of working selfishly (自私地) for himself alone. The school therefore arranges games and matches for its pupils Football is a good team game , it is good exercise for the body , it needs skill and a quick brain , it is popular and it is cheap : as a result , it is the
