Ive seen some peoples sites __7.___ hundreds of friends, all moments away down a fiber optic Cable, providing they are logged on to their computers or hooked up to a high-spec cell phone. It creates the possibility of "befriending" anyone in the world who has online access. Currently, Facebook has 150 million users. That means theres a lot of "friends" out there. The 8 is that you can be "defriended" you can be denied access to the Facebook site someone who had previously invited to be his or her friend. And you

Where once, in the school playground, one child might have petulantly shouted 9 another, "I'm not going to be your friend any more", now the same hurt and loss of face can be performed remotely with the click of a button. A 10 aspect of "defriending" is that, unlike with other applications such as the "what are you thinking about?" posting a digital depository of the often dire, 11 , dull and desperate, no message is sent out alerting you or your contacts about the change in status. You only find out you have 12 when you try to visit a "friends" site, and you find you can no longer get in. the delay of the discovery is all too often doubly hurtful. Just as bombs are dispatched impersonally __ 13 an unseen enemy in modern warfare, 14 relationships are blown out of the window with the same callous disregard, without the risk of any face-to-face comeback.
